ISRAEL ZANGWILL

Toronto Jews will hear Zangwill, the greatest thinker in Israel, Monday evening, January 28, at Massey Hall. His address will be given as a benefit for the Ukrainan immigrants Toronto Jewry has taken under its wing. It is expected that Zangwill, famous as Zionist and as a writer of stories and plays, among them "We Moderns," now playing in the States, and "The Melting Pot," "Children of the Ghetto," and many others, will be greeted by as large an audience as Massey Hall will hold and one eager to hear a man with independent views courageous enough to air them. Zangwill, who is without doubt the most stimulating speaker to-day, will also address the Canadian Club.

RECORD-BREAKING OLDSMOBILE MODELS BEING SHOWN HERE

The new Oldsmobile Six, which proved to be one of the features of the New York Motor Show, is of considerable interest for several reasons. One of these new "sixes," with all gears but high removed, recently made three new records—by crossing the Continent (New York City to Los Angeles) on high; by doing it, despite untoward road and weather conditions, averaging nearly thirty-five miles per hour per imperial gallon of gasoline, and (practically immediately following the run, without overhaul) by establishing a new speed record for a standard car of its engine size. Another reason is that the new Oldsmobile Six has been considerably refined since its advance display at the Canadian National Exhibition (weeks before it was unveiled for public inspection anywhere else) and yet another is that it is an entirely new product, one of the biggest of the early pioneer companies, engineered in accordance with the recent lessons learned in thermal uniformity, turbulence, balance and lubrication among other important factors. That the new records mentioned were made by, and the features alluded to (with others) found in the "world's cheapest six," the new Oldsmobile, is a striking sign of the times, the significance of which it would be superfluous to dilate on. The new models are now on display at 740 742 Yonge Street, and at the Montreal Motor Show.

WHY ARE THERE NO HERESY TRIALS IN THE SYNAGOGUE?

The Christian Church is very much perturbed just at present over a great controversy which is raging between so-called fundamentalists and modernists. Heresy trials are threatening. The metropolitan newspapers are devoting considerable space to religious disputations over such questions as the infallibility of the Bible, the virgin birth of Jesus, the relation of evolution to religion. Dogmas in theology and articles of creed are being questioned. All this is happening at a time when the world is disintegrating for the want of spiritual unity—a message which only true religion can bring—and when the churches should be co-operating to bring about the dethronement of wrong and the enthronement of justice—when the doctrines of force and prejudice need to be replaced by love and forbearance. The tragedy of Christianity and the so-called Christian civilization is that it is frittering itself away in endless controversy, not over the real fundamentals of true religion, which science and religion support, but unmercifully tearing itself to shreds over trivialities which only ignorance can uphold.

At such a time as this a question comes almost instinctively to the fore: Why is the Synagogue and Judaism practically free from heresy trials and religious schisms?

The answer is to be found in the fundamental difference of conception between Judaism and Christianity. Judaism is not primarily a religion in the narrow and accepted use of this term. There is no word in the Hebrew language which corresponds to the word religion, or to the Latin etymology of the word which means "to bind back." The closest approximation in Hebrew which we have for the word religion is "yirath-Adonoi"—"reverence for God." Judaism is the name which designates not a religion but a culture of which religion is part—the principal dominating part. Judaism contains besides religion a body of law, a system of ethics, a distinctive philosophy, a unique language, a literature much of which is secular in character and of which the Bible is only the brilliant beginning— and last but not least Judaism represents a form of life— a mode of communal living. Judaism is not, as even some Jews believe, and many non-Jews imagine, the name of a peculiar code of dogmas, ceremonials and rituals which are more honored in their breach than in their observance. Such a view of Judaism is Christian not Jewish.

Even when regarded from the peculiarly religious angle, Judaism differs from Christianity in this fundamental and very vital respect, which is the pivot on which the answer to the question raised above turns.

Judaism has no dogmas but one, and that one is "shema Yisrael." It has doctrines—teachings. Its only dogma is the belief in the existence, rulership and unity of God. The denial of this cardinal principle makes one a "kofer be'Ikor," a denier of the principle, God, and according to our sages is ground for excommunication. If one believes in God, regardless of how he may interpret this conception, he is a Jew. So far as every other phase of religious theory and practice is concerned the individual Jew is left free. It is this remarkable fact of freedom of thought in religious matters that is responsible not merely for the negative fact that heresy trials and excommunications are unknown in the Synagogue, but for the positive fact that Judaism has constantly developed and changed, and never become stagnant and atrophied.

The Christian Church is built up on dogmas. It is primarily a religion of salvation by faith. In the Church unless one believes he cannot be saved.

This distinction between dogmas and doctrines which we are drawing is not a mere species of sophistry. It is reality. The dictionary defines a dogma to be a theological notion asserted without regard to evidence; an arbitrary, obligatory dictum, which is hard and fast and not open to much change, or liberal, as over against literal, interpretation. A doctrine, or as the German word Lehre better expresses it, is a principle or teaching based on speculative truth. It must commend itself to the reason, and is non-obligatory, excepting as a matter of intellectual necessity. By its very nature it is subject to change and free interpretation.

Many of the beliefs, creeds, sacraments and dogmas of the Christian Church are based on miracles and myths contained in the Scriptures, Apochryphal and apocalyptic writings. These miracles and tales are the quarry out of which the stones of Christian dogmas are hewn. To renounce belief in the historicity of these myths is to destroy the very structure on which the whole edifice is reared. It implies a denial of faith and hence of salvation. For this reason, the Church, by virtue of the power and authority which was hers, always fought science. The fundamentalists in the Church are still fighting science, though they are destined in the end to succumb. In modern Bible criticism, comparative religion and history, even as in the doctrines of evolution, the obscurantists and literalists in the Church have detected an enemy, which disturbs the peace and quiet that has reigned heretofore, and therefore the "fundamentalists are endeavoring by every means, fair and foul, to muzzle and root out the teachings of these new sciences from the seminaries, colleges and universities under their control. We hope in vain because "great is truth and strong above all things."

The attitude of the Synagogue and of Judaism has always been just the contrary to that of the Church. The rabbis always welcomed new learning and science. Learning and especially Reason, with a capital R, have been the very foundations on which the structure of Jewish thought and culture was reared. No other people, besides the Greeks, emphasized the importance of Reason as much as the Jews. A favorite rabbinic motto always was "to bring the beauty of Japheth into the tents of Shem." What else do the names of Philo, Maimonides, Spinoza and Zunz stand for excepting this principle of combining religion, philosophy and science in one. Judaism has always been a reasonable religion, whose doctrines commended themselves to reason.

The freedom which Jews have always enjoyed and insisted on in religious matters is best illustrated by the following excerpts taken from various periods in Israel's cultural history.

Say the rabbis: "Not I, in my higher realm, but you, with your human needs, fix the form, the measure, the time and the mode of expression for that which is divine."

Translated into other words, it means that every generation has the right to adapt its religious principles and rituals to meet their cultural and practical requirements. We know of no more liberal expression anywhere in religious thought than this.

The Jewish attitude towards such questions as the infallibility of the Bible, the necessity for change in ceremonial and ritual, is illuminated by the following quotations from a few of the greatest teachers in Judaism who lived during the Middle Ages. They illustrate the complete freedom and liberality which characterized Judaism and made heresy and excommunication rare occurrences in the Synagogue.

Maimonides (1135-1204) admits that the institution of sacrifice in the Bible was a temporary device instituted to wean Israel away from the practice of idolatry. He thereby acknowledges the temporary character and validity of customs and traditions, especially those which have lost all moral meaning.

Gersonides (1288-1344) frankly acknowledged the possibility of a real conflict between Reason and Revelation, and declared that the Bible cannot prevent us from holding that to be true which our reason prompts us to believe.

Ibn Ezra (1092-1167) was the father of higher Biblical criticism. In his commentary to the Bible he makes mention of the post-Mosaic authorship of certain passages in the Pentateuch, and even refers to the dual authorship of the book of Isaiah.

These men were leaders in Judaism. Their teaching was not regarded as heresy. Though it was unorthodox and met with criticism, they were not excommunicated. Spinoza, who was cried suffered not so much for his unorthodox views, as for the fact that these views were inimical to the political welfare of the Jews in Amsterdam. To secure their political position, which was at the mercy of the Christians, the Jews of that city used Spinoza's views as a pretext to try him. By excommunicating him they proved to the Christian citizens of the country, that tolerated them and gave them a haven of refuge, that they were not in sympathy with Spinoza's views and that he did not speak for them. It was a heavy price to pay for a few crumbs of safety. The stain has never faded from the escutcheon.

Since Spinoza's time heresy trials and excommunications on religious grounds have been noteworthy by their extreme rarity. In our own day there are many fundamental differences in religious views and opinions between Reform and Orthodox Jew—between the Maskil and the pious Jew—between the Chassid and the Misnagid —between the religious and even a religious Jew, yet the Synagogue has had no heresy trials. The church which took over so much from the Synagogue failed to take over this vital progressive principle or freedom, and therefore it suffers from the devastating schisms which have split her up into 257 varieties.

One thing is significant, however, in the present controversy between modernists and fundamentalists. (The latter should more appropriately be designated trivialists because they really do not stress the fundamentals of religion, but the insignificant trivialities.) It is the attempt by the modernists to apply the canons of reason and science to the dogmas of the past. In doing this they are coming closer to Judaism's teachings and religious attitude. Thus, in proportion as the liberal Christians emphasize the message of Jesus rather than his person—by that we mean the dogmas of divine birth, resurrection and miracle workings—they are approaching closer to the liberal Jewish view of Jesus.

In spite of everything, Judaism is coming into its own again and exerting a powerful leavening influence on the religious thought of our time.

There were three unwitting contributors to this column this week. One was the "Star," the other Judge Cohen, and the third a friend who wrote to us from Oklahoma.

The "Star" earned notice here by establishing between the advertisement of Rabbi Siegel's sermon, and that of Rabbi Brickner's sermon, a paid invitation to learn the tango trot, all in all as rare a bit of display advertising make-up as we ever saw. Judge Cohen's contribution was a worthy pronouncement from the bench to the effect that he "wouldn't convict a dog on a stool pigeon's evidence."

Our friend from Oklahoma is entitled to space in which to say: "Why is it that where you live, Jews are practically segregated from Gentiles, and both practically hate each other? Even in Oklahoma, with all its talk of the Ku Klux Klan and anti-Semitism, it isn't that bad. I must tell you about a booth some women had at the Jewish bazaar where we Gentiles went to buy. It had in huge letters across the top K. K. K., and when you got near enough to read it said 'Klean, Kosher Kooking.'"

It took at least two Episcopalian bishops to officiate at the wedding of Jacob Schiff's granddaughter, but a Gentile couple recently chose to be married by Rabbi Lewis Browne, of New York. The contracting parties were Arthur Dabison Ficke, poet, and Gladys Brown, painter, and the wedding took place at the home of the poet, Edna St. Vincent Millay, in the presence of people prominent in literary and art circles. The Schiff girl failed to make public her reasons for marrying under Episcopalian auspices, but the Fickes said right out that the reason they had wanted to be married by a rabbi was their "aesthetic repugnance to Christian clerics and justices of the peace."

"Woman, the Masterpiece," by B. M. Greene. Toronto: The Ryerson Press.

Mr. Greene, the well-known editor of "Who's Who," has surprised the reading public with a volume of two plays, which he has entitled "Woman, the Masterpiece." In the first play, after which he has named the volume, he shows abundantly the benefits of his wide reading. Spiritualism, Greek logic, a hint of scholasticism, Bergsonism, Ruskin, Whistler, and almost everyone else you can think of, follow and fraternize with one another in unprecedented peace and harmony. In fact an idyllic calm is the outstanding achievement of this entertaining volume. The characters neither eat, nor drink, nor love, nor hate, nor fight, and yet they talk. So novel a feat would, of course, have been impossible with the limited technique of the modern drama; but the author, with a sureness of touch rare in a beginner, and with a unique success, has employed the argument of the mediaeval mystery play. The leading characters enter, heralded by advance notices of scintillating small talk, bow, speak their verses, and then arrange themselves, concluding each of the four episodes, into tableaux, in each case around a woman—hence the title of the play—resembling four well-known paintings, the "Mona Lisa," the "Woman Paring Her Nails," "Mrs. Siddons and the Tragic Muse," and Whistler's "My Mother." The second play, "The God-Intoxicated Man," involves Spinoza, and is appropriately more profound in content, and more sepulchral in tone; the action is enveloped in philosophic doubt and ends in chaos; and all in all is a stiff bit of argument whose complete understanding the Young Judaea circles will find quite taxing. However, with the aid of the Zangwill Spinoza story some definition of the characters is possible, and some headway can be made through the atmosphere, and in the general interpretation. These plays meet a genuine need and should enjoy a large sale. For Sunday schools, church socials, Christmas and Chanukah celebrations they are admirably suited: they are clean, absolutely free of all moral taint, and still amusing; they contain many axioms and proverbs of long tried and proven virtue; the characters are numerous and bear famous names; and on account of the little action should require only short rehearsing. Above all they are designed for tableau effects. In addition the volume is well bound, printed and illustrated, and will provide an excellent gift book.

Menorah Society Addressed on Anti-Semitism

That the anti-Semitism prevalent in Europe is due to economic and political reasons in addition to the centuries long prejudice, and that the Jews themselves, by their geographic location and activities in the economic sphere, helped to cause this antagonism, were statements of Mr. Marvin Lowenthal that interested a large gathering of students last Thursday evening, in the bi-weekly Menorah meeting at the Zionist Institute.

Mr. Lowenthal gave a lightning yet comprehensive sketch of conditions in Europe, dealing especially with Germany, Austria, Roumania, Poland and Italy. Although the evening's address was entitled, "The Conditions Which the Jews Are Faced with in Europe," Fascism, Communism in Germany, and the rise of nationalism in Poland, Hungary and Germany were also described.

Mr. Lowenthal believed that there was no solution to the present conditions in Europe. The League of Nations, the participation of the United States in European affairs, and other such kindred species, might contribute towards a solution, but it was his opinion that they could not effect much as the morale of the European peoples was destroyed, and a century or possibly more was required until it was restored and faith in existing institutions was rebuilt. For the present he could not see how the demoralization of Europe could be remedied and stability restored. He looked for time, a hundred or more years of it, to bring peace and stability.

DAUGHTERS OF ISRAEL SOCIETY

A grocery shower in behalf of the immigrants recently arrived was held at the Zionist building on Monday, January 14. Seventy-two packages of groceries and $32.00 in cash was collected. Eight of the visitors filed applications for membership.

NEGRO EDITORS OFFER WORKS OF NEGRO AUTHORS FOR JEWISH LIBRARY IN PALESTINE

New York (J.T.A.)—A. Philip Randolph and Chandler Owen, editors of "The Messenger," leading organ of negro opinion, in a letter addressed to Dr. Chaim Weizmann, President of the World Zionist Organization, offer to collect the works of representative negro authors for the Hebrew Library in Palestine, to the end that a greater bond of friendship and understanding be promoted between the Jewish and Negro peoples of the world.

The letter in part, follows:

"To the end of rendering available to the Jewish thinkers the works of negro scholars, I want to suggest and request that a section of the Library be set aside for negro literature by negro writers, so that negro life and culture by negro authors may be presented authoritatively to the Jewish world.

"Now, in order that the collection of these works may not constitute a burden on you, permit me to offer my services in assembling the most notable works and presenting them as a gift to the Library through the medium of 'The Messenger' from the negro race. It may be considered as a gift from the race since I shall solicit the works from individual negroes and negro institutions."
